Enterprise Architecture Manager

Reporting to the CIO, you will be responsible for structuring IT platform so that it supports the goals of the company. It involves the development of a future-state architecture (IT services, technology and data) that enables the achievement of the business strategy. This, includes the documentation of the present architecture, a gap analysis that identifies the shortfalls in the current state in terms of its ability to support strategy, and a roadmap to take Asendia from its current state into the future, desired state.

Your tasks

- Initiate Master Data Management by identifying existing information and data flows and build the roadmap to a 'single source of truth' for Business strategic data.
- Leverage and involve IT Community team in a collaborative manner to develop Enterprise Architecture roadmap.
- Partner with Business to ensure constant strategic alignment.
- Assess Business capabilities needed to ensure Asendia's strategy achievement and identify the IT capabilities required to enable them.
- Inventory and categorize business applications, their inter-relationships, and their contribution to business goals.
- Assess applications portfolio against target business capabilities to determine functional vs. strategic fit and identify missing components.

Your profile

- You have a Master's degree in business administration or computer technology.
- 5 to 10 years of experience in Functional or Enterprise Architecture.
- You have proven ability to think strategically, assess current state against target, balance big picture and future vision, assess IT implications of business strategy.
- You understand technology, industry best practices and digital trends and their impact on Enterprise Architecture.
- Strong communication (written and oral), interpersonal skills. Ability to convey concepts to both IT and Business audiences.
- Written and spoken English. French and German conversation level is an asset. Working language is English.
- You have a high personal responsibility, perseverance, good team spirit and appreciate collaboration with different countries and cultures.
